McConnell Building officially opens

The J.W. McConnell Building was officially inaugurated last week with Concordia faculty and staff members, donor families, students, administration and the Québec government participating in the opening ceremonies.

The stage was set for speeches by the Minister of Higher Education and Science, Lucienne Robillard, Chancellor Alan B. Gold, in his last official function for the University on the day marking the end of his five-and-a-half-year appointment as Chancellor, and the Rector, Patrick Kenniff.

Three plaques were also unveiled, commemorating the contributions of the two major donor families and the Québec government. Other plaques situated around the new building and in the Georges P. Vanier Library on the Loyola Campus honour those who contributed to the Capital Campaign, as well as charter members of the Rector's Circle.

About 1,000 people attended the ceremonies, which struck a sad note early in the proceedings when Chancellor Gold called on the assembly to join him in a moment of silence to remember Concordia's four slain professors. Rector Kenniff later paid homage to Matthew Douglass, Michael Hogben, A. Jaan Saber and Phoivos Ziogas, saying these new facilities symbolized what the professors had strived for in their professional lives: a better learning environment for students.

Chancellor

Alan B. Gold, Concordia's Chancellor for five-and-a-half years, stepped down last week. Student journalist Colin Niven talked to him last spring and got the former Chief Justice of the Superior Court's thoughts on Concordia and where it's going.

Homecoming

More than 300 graduates came back to Concordia to celebrate Homecoming and more than 1,000 people participated in the three days of activities. One sour note: 4,000 were on hand to watch the Stingers lose to the Bishop Gaiters, 46 to 9.

Sexual Harassment

An eight-page pull-out supplement is included in this issue compiled by Sexual Harassment Officer Sally Spilhaus. It is the Office's first annual report and describes how it has handled complaints in its first 17 months of operation.

No issue next week for Thanksgiving. CTR will return on Oct. 22.

First European Parliament head speaks

by Barbara Black

Simone Veil, one of France's most popular public figures, will deliver the Stone-Consolidated lecture on Monday, Oct. 19.

She will speak at noon in the J.A. DeSève Cinema, on the ground floor of the J.W. McConnell Building, 1400 de Maisonneuve Blvd.

Once touted for the presidency of France despite having introduced controversial social change, Veil was France's first woman minister. Then she entered the wider arena of the new Europe, becoming the integrated parliament's first president.

Veil's lecture is titled, "L'Union européenne face à ses nouvelles responsabilités." It will be delivered in French, with no translation.

Last week's front page photo showed an empty Place Concordia in the new J.W. McConnell Building, soon after construction was completed. The area has bustled with activity since the start of classes and was the site of last week's inauguration ceremonies. About 1,000 people, including faculty and staff members, donors, guests and students, gathered in the skylit atrium to see plaque unveilings and hear speeches by Lucienne Robillard, Minister of Higher Education and Science, outgoing Chancellor Alan B. Gold, and Rector Patrick Kenniff.

Off the Cuff is a weekly column of opinion and insight into major issues in the news. If you are a Concordia faculty or staff member and have something to say "off the cuff," call CTR at 848-4882.

Collor impeachment good sign for Brazilian democracy, says Cattoni

The manner in which Brazilian President Fernando Collor de Mello was impeached is reassuring to Augusto Cattoni, a Professor of Political Science. The Brazilian-born Cattoni, while disappointed in Collor, was relieved that there was no military intervention.

"This is great for everybody. Not only did we get rid of a corrupt president, we did so in a politically mature way without military intervention or threat of a military coup. When you consider that the military was in power until 1985, this is not insignificant. The military said that it would abide by the constitution; this is a remarkable statement."

"The different sectors of society acted swiftly and in a very respectful manner, with due process of law being respected. There was no violence, only joy, complete with a carnival-like celebration. This event may mark a coming of age for democracy in Brazil. Even Brazil's image abroad will probably improve."

"For the moment, Collor is out for six months during which time he will be tried by the Senate. (Like the United States, Brazil has an elected chamber of deputies, representing the people, and an elected Senate, representing the states.) If Collor is ousted, the acting president, the former vice-president, will become president until the next election."

"Personally, I, like most Brazilians, feel disappointed and betrayed by Collor. Running on an anti-corruption campaign, he was elected with very high expectations. Now the mood in the country is against corruption, in contrast to the past where corruption was always somewhat expected. There is a yearning for morality in politics."

"The only thing worrying me now is that the positive things Collor did, such as opening the economy, will come to naught under the acting president. However, being Brazilian, I am optimistic for improvement in the future. (It is the Brazilian nature to be optimistic, sometimes even too much so. Brazilians' characteristic irreverence and good sense of humour keeps them from killing each other.)"

THE DROP DEADLINE FOR FALL COURSES IS OCTOBER 30, 1992

How do I drop a course?

Courses must be dropped at the Registrar's Services Department
SGW — J.W. McConnell Building, Room 185
Loyola — Administration Building, Room 211

If I stop attending class, have I dropped the course?

No, you are registered in the course until you drop it at the Registrar's Services Department.

If you stop attending class without formally dropping the course, you will automatically receive a failing grade for the course.
This failing grade will lower your Grade Point Average.

Not sure whether to drop your course?

Visiting professor takes 'classical' approach

by Eve Krakow

in Latin, on Virgil's Aeneid.

He also delivered this week the first of four public lectures on classical literature. He will look at different poets to illustrate areas of Roman experience: epic, satire, tragedy, love and change. The lectures will be accompanied with slides of art materials, sculptures and paintings, and with excerpts from music which draws on the same material.

McKay said the influence of classical ideas have had a tremendous impact on art, music, and opera.

"It explains the realities of our existence, but it also extends into the mysteries, the shadowy, the not altogether disciplined zones which Virgil explored in his writings," he said.

McKay said he is especially struck by his findings during his work in Sicily and central Italy.

Human experience

"I felt an awareness of continuity of human experience," he said, explaining that over the years these people have had to deal with similar experiences, find answers and compromise, in response to newcomers, invasions, disasters and catastrophes.

In some ways, McKay is not a foreigner to Concordia. He has maintained relations with the University for a number of years, as several of his students are professors here. He commended the University for its unique approach to learning.

"I've always admired the experimental, forthright and original position that Concordia has taken towards the humanities," McKay said. "It responds to particular needs, to particular expressions within its student membership and is alert to the need to provide new horizons, new directions in times of stress and strain, which we're surely undergoing."

NEW WEEKEND HOURS HALL BUILDING

In order to accommodate the needs of the Concordia community, the Hall Building weekend hours are being extended.

Effective October 1, 1992, the Hall Building will be open as follows:

Saturday	8:30 am to 10:00 pm
Sunday	8:30 am to 10:00 pm
Holidays	Closed

All public areas in the Hall Building will be accessible at these times. Access to other areas is restricted in accordance with current regulations.

The Hall Building will be open, as usual, Monday to Friday from 8:30 am to 11:30 pm. Faculty, staff and graduate students will continue to have access to the building after hours.

All others requiring after hours access to the Hall Building must follow normal security procedures. That is, they must be on a registered "After Hours" list, must have a valid Concordia ID card, and must sign in with the security desk.

Computer Literacy Programme receives gift

Digital donates more than $20,000 in equipment

The branch manager of Digital Equipment, Pierre Chadi (far left), came to Concordia last week to make a presentation of more than $20,000 of equipment to the Faculty of Arts and Science, to be used in the Computer Literacy Programme. On hand for the presentation were (left to right) Andrew McAusland, Director of the programme, Gail Valaskakis, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science, and Peter Bird, Vice-Dean, Research, Space and Technical Services.

Like father, but not daughter

by Eve Krakow

Women face prejudice within their own families when it comes to joining the family-owned business, research by a graduate from Concordia's Executive MBA programme suggests.

As part of her thesis paper, Lisa Hollinger contacted more than 50 daughters in family-owned businesses to find out about their experiences. Of 33 respondents, 18 (or 55 percent) worked in the business, and 15 (45 percent) did not or had left. Hollinger wanted to determine the motivation behind their decision to work or not to work in the business.

"The parental support they received turned out to be very important, particularly support from the father," Hollinger said, adding that in each of the cases, the father owned and operated the business.

"The fathers of the daughters who left or didn't join were very, very non-supportive," she said. "In all the cases where she was involved, they were very supportive."

Support from the mother tended to be in line with that of the father, she said.

Hollinger said prior research has shown that the majority of fathers would rather pass their business on to a non-relative than to their daughters.

"We're dealing with a cultural bias issue. People's immediate reaction to me was, 'But it's her father, he knows her,' and I'd say, 'So what.'

"One of my conclusions was that the daughter has trouble getting into the family-owned business — but this is not an issue for the son," said Hollinger. "The son is the natural, accepted and expected heir. It is not even an issue of, 'Dad, can I come in?' If he wants in, he's in."

Hollinger has worked in the family business for 15 years, beginning summers while still in school. She is now a senior executive with W.H. Hollinger (Canada) Inc., a Montréal-based insurance brokerage company.

Although her parents have been supportive, Hollinger wanted to talk to other daughters in her position to share experiences. In researching the topic, she found very little material on daughters in family businesses. Most of the articles spoke only from the father's viewpoint, or involved father and son relationships.

Hollinger said statistics in the U.S. indicate that 90 percent of North American businesses are family-owned. However, only 30 to 40 percent of those businesses remain in the family a second generation.

She said that previous research suggested that many women who go into family businesses are not well educated and cannot find another job. Her survey results indicated the total opposite.

"Most of my respondents were college or university educated," Hollinger said. "Most worked somewhere else before joining the family business, in order to prove their own identity, and to prove that they were owed their management job."

Many of the comments from respondents to her survey showed that their parents had very traditional views of the daughter's role. Many expected she would leave the business once she married and had children. In other cases, brothers would be actively solicited to join the business, while daughters

by Donna Varrica

This column welcomes the submissions of all Concordia faculty and staff, to promote and encourage individual and group activities in teaching and research, and to recognize work-related achievements.

- An article by Visiting Professor Cigdem Solas of the Department of Accountancy was the lead article in the Spring 1992 Asian Review of Accounting. It was titled "Usefulness of Disclosure Items in Financial Reports: A Comparison Between Jordan and Kuwait." She also presented a paper, co-written with Ismail Otar, a colleague from Turkey, at the annual conference of the American Accounting Association. The paper was titled "An Historical Examination of the Bookkeeping Rules and Accounting Signs (Siyaqat) During the Il-Khan Dynasty 1220-1350." Her submission was one of 60 chosen from a field of 600.
- Sociology and Anthropology Professors Anthony Synnott and David Howes, collaborated on an article titled "From Measurement to Meaning — Anthropologies of the Body," which was published in Anthropos, 87.1992:1447-166. Synnott's article "Tomb, Temple, Machine and Self: the Social Construction of the Body" was published in BJS, Vol. 43, Issue 1.
- Rose Sheinin, Vice-Rector, Academic, attended meetings last spring of the Royal Society of Canada at Carleton University in Ottawa. She took part in the formulation of policy concerning women in and the Medical Research Council of Canada, submitted as part of the Strategic Planning Process. Sheinin also participated as Chair of the Committee of the Advancement of Women in Scholarship for the Royal Society of Canada. Sheinin presented a paper titled "The Role of the Universities in the Development and Implementation of Canadian Science Policy: The École Polytechnique Massacre in Perspective," this summer at the European Societies for the Social Study of Research in Gothenburg, Sweden.
- Stephen Menzies, who teaches 3-D computer animation at MITE Avista, designed the cover of the September issue of AMIGA World. Each of the work's components is a 3-D object. The original was a 14 x 20-inch photograph, titled Brightside, which was shown in a recent computer art exhibition.
- Professors and students from the Departments of Music, Theatre and Contemporary Dance volunteered to teach 200 students in the Lakeshore School Board's High School Festival of the Arts about the various aspects of the performing arts. They presented 23 workshops, while the high school students used the Concert Hall and F.C. Smith Auditorium to present their work.
- Sociology and Anthropology Professor Chengiah Ragaven was the keynote speaker at the Canadian Human Rights Foundation's 5th Training Session for Human Rights Education, held last June at Marianopolis College. His address was titled "Global Human Rights — Educational Strategies for the 21st Century." He was also a participant at the 2nd World Congress on Violence and Human Co-existence at the Palais de Congrès in July.
- Marketing Professor Ulrike de Brentani's article, "The Effect of Customization and Customer Contact on the Factors Determining Success and Failure of New Industrial Services" was published as part of the Presentation and Proceedings at the annual conference of the European Marketing Academy in Aarhus, Denmark in May. A refereed journal article she co-wrote with Robert G. Cooper, titled "Developing Successful New Financial Services for Businesses" was published in Industrial Marketing Management in July.
- Barnes and Noble recently published Irish Literature and Culture, an international collection of critical essays edited by Michael Kenneally of the English Department. Contributors include writers from France, Britain, Ireland, Northern Ireland, Austria, the United States and Canada.

CLARIFICATION

At the request of Biology Professor Elaine Newman, her remarks during a show of support for the Faculty of Engineering and Computer Science at the last Senate meeting are reprinted here, verbatim.

This transcript was provided by the Secretary of Senate from the taped proceedings of that meeting.

"I have been at this University for 23 years and I want to express my total admiration for the Faculty of Engineering [and Computer Science]. It has come about from nothing to one of the best Faculties in the country. That is due to the work of a particularly good dean, heads of institutes, chairmen of departments, often chosen by the dean; and I think we have not given enough praise to that Faculty or to that dean, and I state, today, my total admiration."

THE CONCORDIA UNIVERSITY MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT FUND

Concordia University has established the Concordia University Memorial Endowment Fund as a lasting memorial to Professors Matthew Douglass, Michael Hogben, Jaan Saber and Phoivos Ziogas.

Contributions may be made by cheque payable to Concordia University and sent to:

Concordia University Memorial Endowment Fund or via internal mail to S BC-319.

The funds generated by the endowment will be designated to specific uses at a later date, after full consultation with the bereaved families.

The University is pleased to announce that, thanks to Concordia Shuffle pledges and individual donors, the fund now total over $35,000. However, it is hoped that that amount will be at least doubled in order to provide sufficient investment income.

Enquiries should be directed to David Brown at University Advancement or at (514) 848-4859.

REAL EDUCATION FOR THE REAL WORLD

Dr. Ziogas was a 'scholar to the core'

I have never felt such grief at the passing away of someone outside my family circle. In the last five weeks, not a single day has gone by without my discussing Phoivos Ziogas with my family and praying for him. During these gruelling days, I have asked myself several times: What was so special about Phoivos?

Dr. Ziogas was a fine person of noble character, yet down to earth and without pretension — ever willing to listen, care and help others. He enjoyed a number of successes and a few disappointments, too, but he never gloated, nor did he ever let disappointment depress him. He displayed remarkable equanimity and composure at all times. In short, Dr. Ziogas "never attached himself to the results of his actions or failed in his dedication to his duties," a practical way of life preached in the Bhagavad Gita.

Dr. Ziogas was a scholar to the core. He reached the pinnacle of his career when, only a few months ago, he was elected Fellow of the prestigious Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE) for his outstanding contributions to the field of power electronics. Recently, he assumed the associate editorship of the IEEE Transactions on Industry Applications. Of course, he had years of further accomplishments ahead of him, though fate had different plans for him. A professional colleague of Dr. Ziogas said of him, "He was well liked and respected by everyone in our community and will be missed by all."

Indeed, Phoivos was a special person, combining scholarship with a rare compassion for his fellow human beings, along with an irrespressible enthusiasm for both his life and his work. I feel grateful for having been blessed with the fortune of a friendship with a person like Phoivos.

May the soul of Dr. Ziogas rest in peace.

New book pays tribute to classic

Jeremiah Hayes, Professor of Electrical and Computer Engineering, has recently collaborated on a graduate level textbook titled Data Communication Principles with Richard D. Gitlin, head of the Network Systems Department of AT&T Bell Laboratories, and Stephen B. Weinstein, Executive Director of System Integration Research at Bell Communication Research. Work on the book began when the three were members of the Data Theory Department of the former Bell Telephone Laboratories.

The title of the textbook is a tribute to a classic in the field, Principle of Data Com- munications (McGraw-Hill, 1968), written by former members of the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, Professors R.W. Lucky, J. Salz and E.J. Weldon.

The 1992 text updates the earlier version, presenting the extraordinary growth of data communications in that time, including, among other topics, the principles of modern facsimile transmission. Another point of interest is the action of a sophisticated text compression algorithm (Lempel-Ziv) in encoding the soliloquy from the James Joyce short story, The Dead, into a shorter text without loss of information.

ATTENTION ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS G.P.A. REGULATIONS

What are the G.P.A. regulations?

The Grade Point Average Regulations (G.P.A.) applies to you if you entered the Faculty of Arts and Science in 1989 or after. Each year, at the end of May, your annual G.P.A. is calculated and appears on your transcript. It is based on the courses you took in the previous summer, fall and winter. In order to remain in good standing at the University, you must obtain a minimum G.P.A. of 2.00 (C). If you receive a G.P.A. of between 1.50 and 1.99 you will automatically be placed on Conditional Standing for the next year. In this case, you must obtain a G.P.A. of 2.00 (C) in the next assessment period. If you do not, you will be in failed standing.

If you receive a G.P.A. of 1.49 or less, you will be in failed standing.

Where can I get more information?

- See your undergraduate advisor in your department. Every undergraduate student in Arts and Science has a departmental advisor. Make an appointment with the departmental secretary.
 - See the 1992-93 Undergraduate Calendar, "Academic Performance Requirements," page 57.
 - See a professional advisor in the Office of Student Affairs, Arts and Science. Drop by the library (SGW - Room 689) or the Administration Building (Loyola - Room 328). You can also dial 848-2101 or 848-2098.
- We will be glad to talk to you.

Former Chancellor reflects on his years at Concordia

A conversation with Alan B. Gold

by Colin Niven

Concordia University

Chancellor Alan B. Gold

stepped down Sept. 30 after five-and-a-half years in office.

His last official function was the inauguration of the J.W. McConnell Building.

The Rt. Hon. Jeanne Sauvé has been named his successor.

Gold was Chief Justice of the Québec Superior Court from 1983 until he retired this year on July 21, his 75th birthday. He is also a skilled labour specialist, having mediated disputes in the railway, construction and airline industries, at Canada Post, with longshoremen and the Québec government.

He negotiated an agreement on human-rights issues during the Oka crisis in 1990.

Chancellor Gold is one man who can answer many questions on the state of Concordia today. In an interview last spring, he reflected on his tenure as titular head of the University.

What sort of evolution have you seen at Concordia over the past 5½ years?

I think that Concordia has become much more aware of its position and role, not only as a teaching institution in Québec, but as an institution contributing to the welfare of the province and the community in general. Obviously, we've made very great strides in research and in teaching and we've also done some marvellous work in cooperation with the government to expand our facilities. We've come to the understanding that we're a first-class university entitled to first-class consideration.

What is the future of Concordia as an English-language institution with ever fewer English-speaking students to fill its halls?

I have no fear for the English institutions in Québec. I do not think they will suffer unduly and I certainly don't think Concordia will. Concordia University is more than an English-language institution; it is in one sense a universal or international institution. Of course, it's an English institution, but look at the people who make it up. In the province of Québec, one should reflect the French fact. Concordia should be a university to reflect the reality of Québec in Canada.

What of Concordia's tradition of 'continuing education'?

Sir George Williams University started out as a school of second chance. Some of the brightest stars in the community today are people who, for one reason or another, had to leave school. The only way they could survive was to get a job. And when they wanted to go back to school, there was no place for them to go except Sir George. Its role as a supplier of continuing education is, in my view, one of the richest legacies that Concordia inherited from Sir George Williams and one which it should and must continue.

What should be the main concern of school administrators and student governors?

If you're not going to teach students and do research, and your goal is not to end up

A real education is to teach you how to think, how to learn, how to listen and how to be a decent human being.

with people who are learning and reasonably happy about the process ... then you might as well close up the shop. Even though the student community, the teaching community, administrators and researchers may not always be in agreement, the fact is that we're all one family and in the interest of all concerned it is important to come to some consensus. That requires good faith and a lot of hard work by all the people in the process.

What has been the secret of your success as a labour mediator?

I guess the secret is hard work, a fair amount of good luck and training. I'm pretty much a good listener; I was brought up to respect other people's points of view. I've been able to get a certain amount of experience and some success and that gives you credibility.

Has your success as a labour specialist helped you in your capacity as a school administrator?

Labour relations, I've said a thousand times, are human relations. Any time you're dealing in the affairs of institutions and organizations you're dealing with people. The capacity to deal with them, to listen, learn and understand allows you to pursue ends and to achieve results that are beneficial to all concerned.

What were your duties as chancellor?

The chancellor rules, but does not govern. So, though I'm the titular head of the institution, I'm really the ceremonial head. I preside over convocations, I make speeches and represent the University at most functions. I'm an ex-officio member of the Board of Governors and I act as chairman of the graduation ceremonies committee. I'm a member of the executive committee and other committees.

What knowledge did you gain from your experience as chancellor?

I've learned that Concordia is not quite the same as other universities. It's an urban, downtown university with a student body that in many ways is a little different from the classical North American university. I would say it's better for it.

Have recent tuition increases served to improve the quality of the education of students at Concordia?

I have always maintained that it would be entirely improper to raise fees if the result were to keep people from going to school. In that respect, it would be wonderful not to have to charges fees at all.

Generally speaking, the increases were not such that they would keep away students who are sincere about going to school. The funds make it possible not only to receive them and treat them better, but to improve the quality of education we give them.

How does the university propose to deal with the $100 million deficit it has amassed?

Even in the best of times, Concordia did not get as much funding as it should have, and, of course, fees were kept at such a very low level that the result was the accumulation of a deficit.

This situation has been more or less regularized. There has been a plan put forward to the government to eliminate the deficit over about a 10-year period by balancing budgets and saving some funds. Without question, some of the money that will be generated by the increase in fees will help.

What does 'real education for the real world' mean?

In my view, a real education is to teach you how to think, how to learn, how to listen and how to be a decent human being. I'm a firm believer that everybody should have the opportunity to learn everything that he or she wants to learn. Then and only then should the student decide what his or her career should be like. But underneath the skills that are required to work in the community outside, there should be some feeling and understanding for the human state.

Concordia gets help from former Polytechnique student

Triumphing over tragedy

by Michael Orsini

Three years ago, Heidi Rathjen couldn't tell you the first thing about guns.

The massacre of 14 women at her school on Dec. 6, 1989 changed that.

Today, the 26-year-old civil engineer can tell you, among other things, the difference between an AK-47 and a Ruger Mini 14, the semi-automatic rifle used by Marc Lépine to gun down the 14 women, 12 of whom were engineering students.

But her full-time job is not selling guns; it's pushing for gun control.

"When I started out, I didn't have the arguments," Rathjen said. "They (the gun lobbyists) just completely destroyed me."

Rathjen was hiding in an office with a few other students while Lépine was stalking his victims in the halls of the École Polytechnique.

"Eventually it sort of clicked that there might be something wrong," Rathjen recalled. "It was a long wait. We could hear everything on the outside."

Rathjen left a comfortable, $37,000 a year job as an engineer at Bell Canada to become the executive director of the Coalition for Gun Control, which was founded jointly by Polytechnique students and by the Toronto-based Canadians for Gun Control.

Although she works full time, she is only paid an average of five hours a week.

The lobby group can't afford to pay her any more than that, she said. But the Coalition for Gun Control is hardly a one-woman show. Coalition President Wendy Cukier spends about 30 hours a week working on gun-control issues on top of her job as a business professor at the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute.

Cukier said she and Rathjen have an interesting working relationship.

"Heidi says I run around starting the fires and she has to put them out," Cukier joked.

"She's got a mind like a steel trap, in the sense that she remembers everything she's heard."

Rathjen was approached recently by Concordia to join a working group set up to discuss Concordia's recently introduced campaign to ban handguns. Rathjen gladly accepted the offer.

"Concordia has been one of our strongest supporters," she said. "Just two weeks before the (Aug. 24) shootings, Concordia gave us $2,000."

And if anyone could help the University in its push for tougher gun-control legislation, it's Rathjen. The Coalition for Gun Control netted about 560,000 signatures on a petition calling for a ban on all military assault weapons.

Rathjen said immersing herself in the gun control campaign immediately following the massacre was just what the doctor ordered.

"Working for me was therapy," she said. "That's how I dealt with the whole thing. It took a day before I even reacted."

The Coalition's efforts are largely responsible for the adoption of Bill C-17, the gun-control law passed almost two years to the day of the campus killings.

The new law restricts firepower, sets standards for safe storage, makes it more difficult to obtain a gun certificate, prohibits the import of converted, semi-automatic weapons and restricts the sale of firearms to people 18 and older.

Despite her initial excitement about C-17 — when the Bill was finally passed by the House of Commons, she "was doing cartwheels in the hallways" — Rathjen said the new law doesn't go far enough.

"It's only a step."

Although Rathjen will sit on the ad-hoc committee, the Coalition has not officially endorsed Concordia's efforts. Rathjen said she soon plans to contact the coalition's supporters to determine if they support a total ban on handguns.

Rathjen is confident that the current petition will yield positive results.

"Concordia is going to get improvements," she said. "Unfortunately, it takes something like that (the Concordia shootings) to get the debate going again."

Her message to the University?

"Keep up the pressure. That's how it works. You have to embarrass the government into changing the laws."

Anyone interested in getting involved in the Coalition can contact Heidi Rathjen at 345-4992.

Journalists discuss media ethics

Media resorts to gimmicks to attract readers

by Danny Kucharsky

As it struggles to redefine itself, the newspaper industry is resorting to questionable tactics to attract readers, said a sports reporter in a panel discussion on journalism ethics.

"I find it appalling what we're putting in our newspaper," said John MacKinnon, a hockey writer for The Ottawa Citizen.

To boost circulation, MacKinnon said his newspaper is engaging in gimmicks such as unscientific telephone surveys to determine who is the best bartender in Ottawa.

MacKinnon, who covers the Ottawa Senators hockey team, said he sometimes finds himself sitting in on meetings to discuss circulation-boosting contests, something he never envisioned doing when he was in journalism school.

A Concordia graduate and former editor of The Georgian (precursor of The Link), MacKinnon said a lot of journalists are becoming demoralized by such measures and noted there is increasing tension between reporters and management.

Speaking on the topic "How Far is Too Far?" during the panel discussion held last Saturday at Concordia in the cinema of the J.W. McConnell Building, Radio-Canada TV news reporter Joyce Napier said journalists should go as far as they can within the boundaries of the law to get their stories.

"We shouldn't decide that (people) don't need certain information," she said.

Southam News correspondent Don McGillivray said he cringes when he hears talk about a free and responsible media and prefers to make a case for a free and irresponsible media. The media should be anarchistic, undisciplined and not subject to regulation, he said.

Journalism Professor Enn Raudsepp, who developed the first journalism ethics course in Canada, said the shop-worn concept, "the public's right to know," is ill-defined. For example, he asked, does the public really need to know about the drinking habits and sexual proclivities of public figures?

Raudsepp said people seldom, if ever, get the whole truth when buying a media product. What they're actually getting is somebody else's judgment of what's important in the world, he said.

MacKinnon said he has had to dispel the image of the sports reporter who is loud, poorly dressed and semi-literate, with a pencil in one hand and a beer in the other.

It doesn't help that sports reporters are viewed as frivolous by their own editors and publishers, he said.

five years."

The department held an open house Saturday in the Bryan Building. Billed as Meet the Pros, 11 graduates talked about their journalism careers.

Leo Gervais, publisher of The Stanstead Journal, a weekly newspaper in the Eastern Townships, told students about the importance of respecting deadlines, being punctual and spoke of the joys of working at a community newspaper.

"It's a great place to learn," Gervais said. "You learn a lot of different skills. Working in community papers, you need to know about editing, photography, paste-up, layout — the more hats you wear the better. And it provides the opportunity to learn about local government."

Jean Laroche, a CBC radio reporter, encouraged budding reporters to try a stint in a remote area, such as the Arctic, if they can.

"You can't knock a place where 15 minutes after your shift ends you can be fishing," he said. "The cast of characters is wacky. Do not shy away from going there."

Constant deadline pressure is what awaits journalists who work for wire services, said Gary Regenstreif, Bureau Chief for Reuters in Caracas, Venezuela. Among other assignments, Regenstreif spent three months covering the Gulf War.

Some famous faces, voices and names got together last Friday at a cocktail party to kick off Concordia's first Journalism Department reunion.

More than 100 graduates mingled last Friday in the atrium of the Georges P. Vanier Library on the Loyola Campus. They included: Walter Buchignani, Andrew McIntosh and George Kalogerakis from The Gazette; Frederic Serre, Brenda O'Farrell and Craig McKee of the The Chronicle; Alison Ramsey of The Westmount Examiner; John MacKinnon and Francine Dubé of The Ottawa Citizen; and Nancy Wood of Maclean's magazine. Radio journalists from the French- and English-language service of the CBC, including Gloria Bishop, Lina Dib, Carmel Kilkenny and Dominique Marcotte, were also in attendance.

Department Director Lindsay Crysler promised he wouldn't wait another 17 years before organizing the next reunion.

"I'm delighted," he said. "We had a terrific turnout. We could do it again in four or Concordia graduate and editor of the alumni magazine, Kathleen Hugessen, takes a break with Journalism Department Director Lindsay Crysler.

Working overseas can be very different from what reporters can expect in North America, Regenstreif said. "Not all countries embrace the theory of a free press like Canada does. In the past three weeks in Caracas, three reporters have been raided by the police in a clear case of harassment."

"Journalism is not a 9-to-5 job," he said. "Most organizations do not have a lot of resources. I got a call at midnight recently to cover something. I couldn't say, 'can I do it tomorrow?'"

Robillard on hand for inauguration of McConnell Building

New building the

by Donna Varrica

Lucienne Robillard, the Minister of Higher Education and Science, took the opportunity of the inauguration of the J.W.

McConnell Building last week to underscore the importance of the role of the library, calling it the heart of the university.

She participated, along with Concordia faculty and staff members, donor families, students, and administration, in opening ceremonies in Place Concordia, the six-storey atrium of the new building. A tour of the library facilities was followed by a reception on the tenth floor of the building.

The opening festivities included speeches by Robillard, outgoing Chancellor Alan B. Gold, and Rector Patrick Kenniff. Three plaques were also unveiled, honouring the two major donor families and the Québec government.

The Minister spoke about the important work of librarians and their staff. "The library staff here have competently provided professional support and essential services for library users so they may use the sources of information to their maximum capacity," she said.

The Québec government gave the University $40 million to defray the cost of the $65 million building. The remaining $25 million was donated by students, faculty, staff, alumni, the general public, corporations and foundations as part of the University's five-year Capital Campaign, which ran between 1983 and 1988.

She concluded by thanking the donors, the University, the architects and the artists, who participated in the realization of this long-awaited dream.

"I hope that the spirit of openness, of generosity and of solidarity, which has been manifested at each stage of this project, will continue to perpetuate as a pledge for a fruitful and promising future."

The rector, in his speech, traced the history of the building's realization, spanning some 20 years, thanking the key players along the way — from Rector Emeritus John O'Brien and then-Vice-Rector, Administration and Finance, Graham Martin, to early project manager Jean-Pierre Roy, consultant Louis Vagianos, Physical Resources Director Frank Papineau, Director, Administrative Services, Physical Resources Michael Di Grappa, the last two Vice-Rectors, Services, Charles Giguère and Charles Bertrand, and Maurice Cohen, Vice-Rector, Institutional Relations and Finance, among many others.

Plaques unveiled

In the second part of the proceedings, three plaques were unveiled in acknowledgement of the contribution of the three major donors to the project.

Derek and Jill McConnell Price, representing the J.W. McConnell Foundation, and the rector unveiled the first plaque commemorating the foundation for whom the building is named.

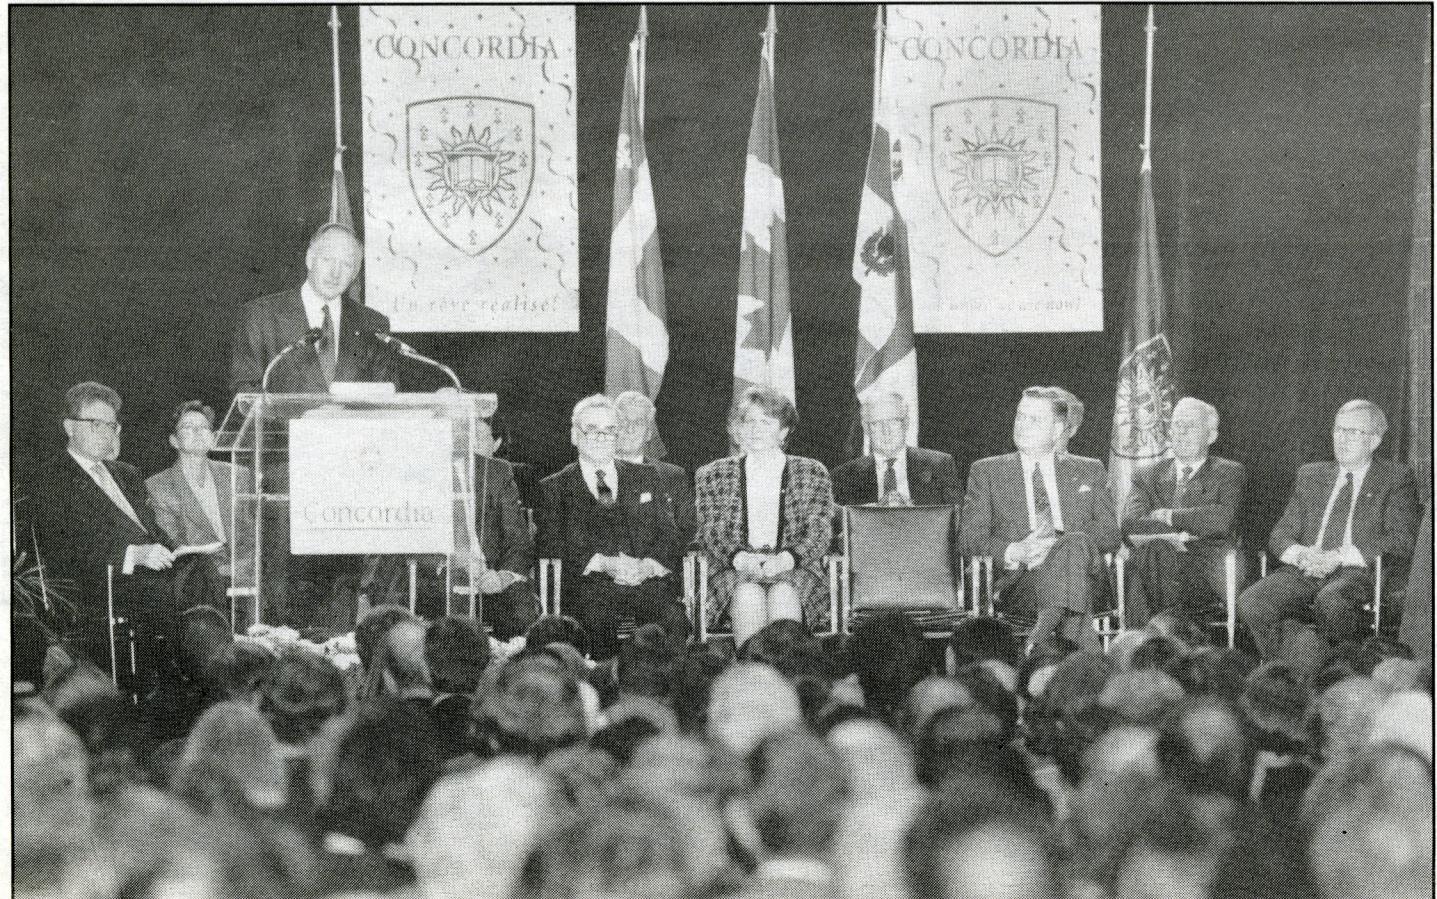

Lorne and Norman Webster of the RHW Foundation joined the Chairman Elect of the Board of Governors, Reginald K. Groome, in unveiling the plaque honouring the foundation for whom the library is named. In the third presentation, Robillard was joined by the Chancellor in unveiling the plaque identifying the Québec government as the principal donor.

The third part of the ceremony included the ribbon-cutting by Robillard, William Stinson, National Chair of the Capital Campaign, James Smith, the National Vice-Chair of the campaign and the rector.

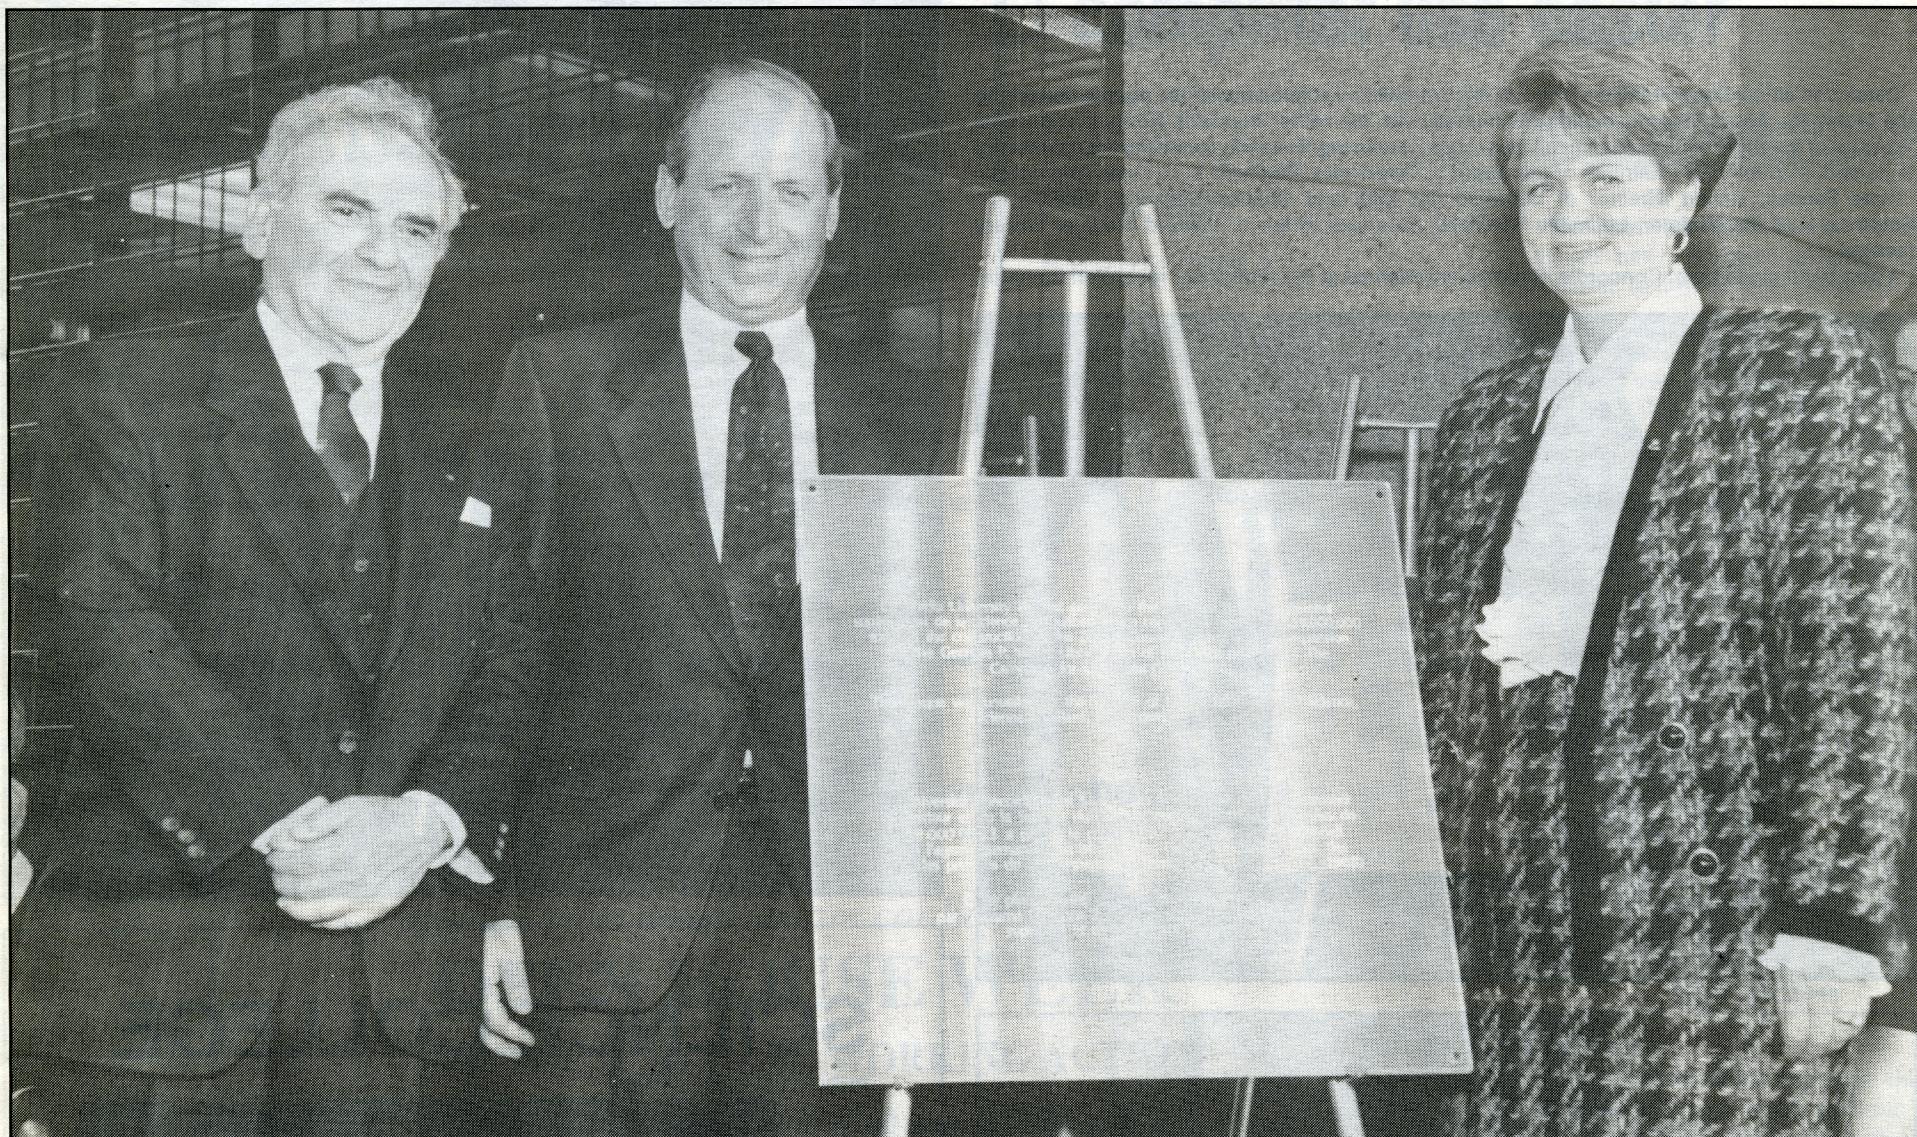

The platform party consisted of Chancellor Gold, Robillard, the rector, William Stinson (President of the Capital Campaign), Reginald K. Groome (the new Chairman of the Board), Bérengère Gaudet (the Secretary-General), Irene Sendek (Acting Director of Libraries), Charles Bertrand (Vice-Rector, Services), Rose Sheinin (Vice-Rector, Academic), Derek and Jill McConnell Price of the J.W. McConnell Foundation, Lorne and Norman Webster of the RHW Foundation, James Smith (Co-President of the Capital Campaign), and Maurice Cohen (Vice-Rector, Institutional Relations and Finance).

Do you know someone who has the eating disorder anorexia nervosa?

Here are some of the signs to look for:

- An overwhelming fear of becoming fat
- An obsession with food, calorie-counting and recipes
- Frequent checking of weight on scale
- Guilt or shame about eating
- Evidence of self-induced vomiting or laxative abuse
- Obvious weight loss or fluctuation in weight

A team of researchers from the Royal Victoria Hospital is looking for women between 16 and 40 years of age who have or who once had anorexia nervosa, and who are interested in participating in a study on parent-child relationships. We are interested in talking with families (daughter, mother and father) who have experienced this problem.

Participation includes completing a series of questionnaires, as well as individual interviews about family relationships. The process will take about 90 minutes and a sum of $50 will be offered to the participants.

For more information, please contact Dr. Lise Laporte at 842-1231, local 5318.

'It costs nothing for students'

New program makes computer use easier

C-Map created by Engineering Professor

by Buzz Bourdon

More than 300 Concordia students have found computers a lot easier to use lately, thanks to a structural engineering professor who teaches at the Centre for Building Studies.

Two years ago, Kinh H. Ha started making his new computer program, C-Map, available to anyone who wanted it, free of charge.

Why would an inventor spend his evenings and weekends working on something for people to use for nothing? Because, Ha said, there was a definite need for the program to "make it easier for users to perform complex computations as they try and solve engineering analysis and design problems."

Since 1968, there has been little development of software for use in structural analysis and design, Ha said. The biggest drawbacks of most software are complexity and cost, with some programs costing as much as $1,000.

"C-Map is a most significant development," Ha said. "It is a simple language that gives access to the powerful graphics, mathematics and numerical techniques which form part of most engineering curriculum, but are rarely used because of the tediousness involved."

Many functions

The program, which has more than 130 functions, covers a broad spectrum of numerical methods ranging from elementary calculus to non-linear constrained optimization, Ha said.

"It's user-friendly for both instructors and students to develop sophisticated engineering computations. It is compact (260 k-bytes), and operates in an intuitive manner that makes it suitable even to junior college students with little experience in computer programming."

C-Map also features: a full-screen text editor with multiple stacked windows for simultaneous editing of programs and output files; a simplified C-like programming language with control structures; recursive functions; a math library; built-in functions for advanced engineering computation, including the processing of general matrix and complex expressions; an interactive expression processor; and, a simple authoring system with automatic cross-referencing of keywords.

World-wide demand

Ha, who has been teaching at Concordia since 1973, said he's pleased with the response to C-Map, which took three years to design. People from universities in the United States, Australia, South America and Asia have written to him asking for details, he said.

"The main advantage is that it costs nothing for students," he said. "I encourage students to distribute it; that's what it's designed for. You can copy it in a matter of minutes."

"Everyone who has used it has fallen in love with it. With other programs, you need to think about getting around their limitations. With C-Map, you think about the problem you're working on."

300 grads attend Homecoming festivities

Concordia graduates

About 300 graduates, some from as far as Hong Kong and California, took part in last week's Homecoming Activities.

Leisha LeCouvie, the University's Special Events and Internal Liaison Co-ordinator, said the event was a success despite a slight drop in attendance.

A total of close to 1,000 people took part in the various events, including An Evening with the Performing Arts, panel discussions and a Gala Dinner Dance at the Ritz Carlton Hotel.

LeCouvie said organizers saw a big increase this year in faculty and staff participation.

Wanted to meet professor

LeCouvie said there were some emotional moments over the three days of celebrations. One woman graduate who is living in California signed up in June, partly because she wanted to see her former professor, A. Jaan Saber, one of four professors killed in the Aug. 24 shootings at Concordia.

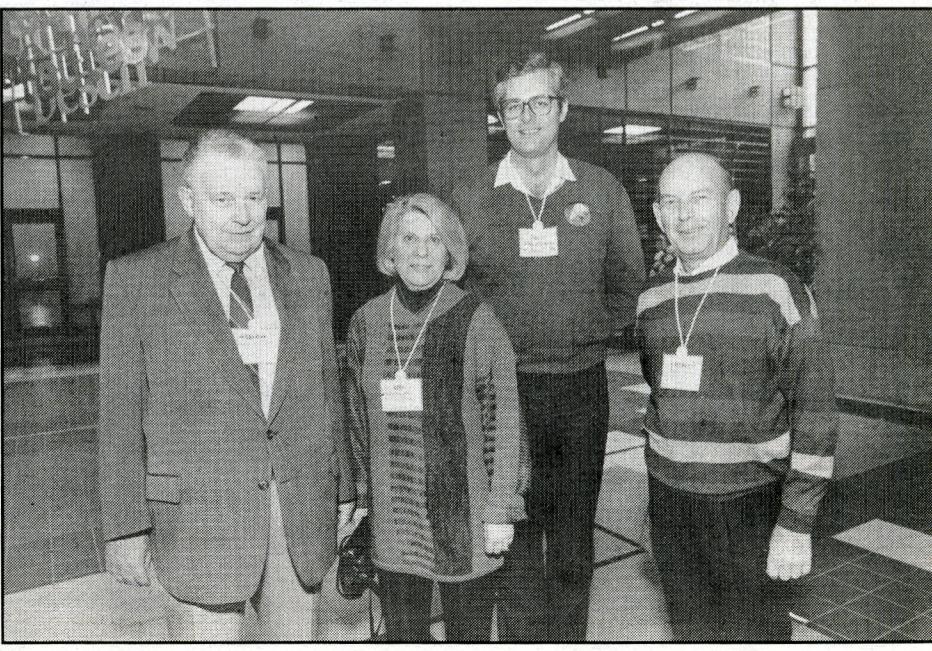

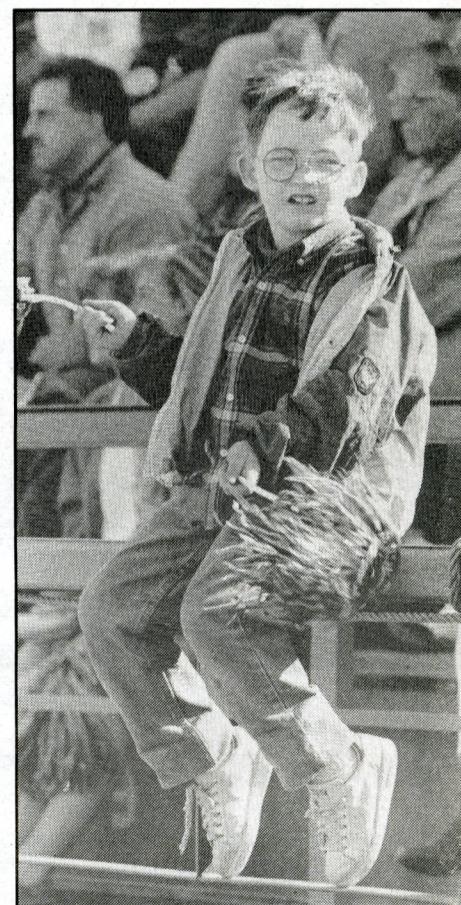

"She said Jaan Saber was able to make her blush every day," LeCouvie said. "She said she came (to Homecoming) to show him that she doesn't blush any more."

More than 4,000 people turned out for the Homecoming Cup Football Game between the Stingers and the Bishop's Gaiters. Concordia lost 46-9.

Forging links with Hong Kong

by Susan Gray

The Continuing Education Language Institute has expanded its horizons and has enabled a Hong Kong University student to do the same.

The student, Chan Wai Yee Carrie, spent the summer at Concordia studying intensive English. Carrie's scholarship, paid for by Continuing Education and Canadian Airlines, represented a first for the popular language centre, which offers language training for professional, social and academic purposes.

While the Institute offers both general and specialized courses in French and English, its main focus is the intensive English programme offered throughout the calendar year. The programme, according to Continuing Education Director Richard Diubaldo, has "grown by leaps and bounds" in recent years. Registration has risen by 150 per cent over the last five years to a total of 955 students annually.

Where the Institute differs from the Études françaises and TESL departments, apart from the fact that its courses are non-credit, is that it provides hands-on or applied programmes of study. In addition, people who approach the Institute "want a course now or in a few weeks," said Diubaldo, referring to the fact that a course can be arranged faster in Continuing Education than it can be in the regular stream.

The intensive English programme is geared to learning for academic purposes, which means an emphasis on critical thinking and related skills. Institute professors base their course, which is divided into seven levels, on materials generated by them, which makes what Language Institute Administrator Gwynn Cherrier calls "a very individual programme."

Other universities have approached Continuing Education to see about "perhaps sharing some of our ideas and materials with them."

However, Diubaldo said the course is still being field-tested on Concordia students.

"We want to publish academically before we share (materials and concepts) with others."

Québec House/Concordia collaboration

The idea for the Hong Kong scholarship, which will pay for one exchange student per year to come to Montréal, came about when Diubaldo and Cherrier were in Hong Kong recruiting students. They found the most support for the project at Québec House in Hong Kong.

Most of the work of putting the scholarship in place was done by Continuing Education, but Québec House was instrumental in many ways, Diubaldo said.

"They helped to refine the idea of the scholarship, provided entries and tied up loose ends for us when we were back in Canada," he said.

Diubaldo noted that the University will benefit from the scholarship endeavour by "establishing a link with a reputable institute like Hong Kong University."

He said that Hong Kong was the first choice for a scholarship programme because of the interest shown there and because the area is very sophisticated in terms of language learning, featuring many language schools and universities of its own.

Most of the cost of the scholarship, which is worth about $6,000, was borne by Continuing Education; Canadian Airlines foot the bill for the return airfare. In addition to travel expenses, Carrie benefited from free tuition, books, materials, insurance and room and board at a homestay residence for 10 weeks.

Carrie, a Social Science student, was chosen by Hong Kong University's Language Centre (a credit programme housed in its English department), because of her academic standing in English.

Fabrikant faces fourth murder charge

Valery Fabrikant has been charged with a fourth count of first-degree murder, following the death Sept. 23 of Phoivos Ziogas, Professor and Chair of the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering.

The former professor was served with a notice of his termination of employment with the University on Sept. 10, with 10 working days to appeal. However, the Concordia University Faculty Association has made known its decision not to act on his behalf in an appeal.

Prior to the addition of the fourth count, Fabrikant's request for office equipment was refused by Québec Superior Court Judge Réjean Paul.

He had asked Judge Paul for a computer, laser printer, telephone and other office equipment. He also asked the judge to place him under "house arrest" so that he could work under more comfortable conditions. The judge refused, informing Fabrikant that house arrest doesn't exist in Canada.

Fabrikant is acting as his own lawyer, but a legal aid lawyer has been assigned to help him with procedure.

The former Concordia professor has also changed his mind about waiving his right to a preliminary hearing, saying he needs to hear testimony from eye-witnesses to the Aug. 24 shooting to refresh his memory of events.

sen, the infamous Nazi death camps. Born and educated in Nice, she and her family were rounded up by the Nazis only a day after she graduated from the local lycée. Her mother, father and brother perished, but Simone and her sister lived.

After the war, she married Antoine Veil, the brother of her best friend in Auschwitz. For the next few years, while her husband rose steadily in the civil service, she devoted herself to her family, but eventually went to university, earning a law degree.

Her work as a reforming magistrate in the justice department attracted the approval of newly elected president Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, who had campaigned on a platform of bringing more women into public office. When he chose her to be health minister in 1974, Veil (pronounced vay) became the first woman cabinet member in French history.

Relaxed abortion laws

For the next five years, Veil steered traditionally Catholic France into a progressive era of liberalized abortion law, generous health insurance benefits, a national anti-smoking drive (which required that she qui-were not. Many said they felt they had to work harder than their brothers to earn respect from employees or gain their clients' confidence.

Hollinger emphasized that her sample, 33 women from Montréal, is much too small a sample to make any sweeping statements.

"The research is very exploratory; it asks more questions than it answers," she said. "It reflects what's going on to a degree, but it is not conclusive."

Hollinger said the situation of daughters in family-owned businesses will change over the next ten years.

"Apparently women represent the greatest percentage of entrepreneurs now," she noted. "If they start their own businesses and bring in their sons and daughters, things will change."

Faculty at Concordia have been urging her to pursue the research, but she said that right now she doesn't have the time. She is president of the EMBA Alumni Association, and is also heavily involved in community work.

She is chairing a committee organizing a benefit at Place Des Arts in November, featuring Bill Cosby, to raise money for the Men's Organization for Rehabilitation Through Training (there's a women's branch too). The organization is a non-governmental system of vocational schools, which offers scholarships and educates underprivileged children.

It was a measure of her calm, measured approach that Veil, who was never elected or even a political partisan while she was in the cabinet, remained enormously popular throughout her tenure, and speculated to be Giscard's successor.

In 1979, she ran for office for the first time, leading a slate for the new European Parliament. She was elected its first president, a post she held until January 1982. She was last re-elected to the Parliament in 1989.

The European Parliament is the legislative arm of the European Community, of which the Economic Community is currently the most visible part, and is the fledgling political structure which will direct the integrated Europe of the future. It represents some 180 million people living in countries with centuries of tumultuous history behind them and a welter of conflicting regulations between them.

In an interview in 1978, Veil said that sexual liberation is not helpful to women unless they gain economic and psychological liberation as well.

"In some ways, the old traditions protected women. It takes maturity and courage to be a woman today," she told the interviewer.

Veil joins the company of previous Stone-Consolidated Inc. lecturers (formerly Consolidated-Bathurst), including jazz musician Wynton Marsalis, renowned chemist John Polanyi and Pulitzer-Prize winning journalist James (Scotty) Reston.
